Yes, they're still going on — only these days the media hardly mention them

RECENT RACE TROUBLE

The headlines below relate to racial disorders which have all occurred during the past 15 months in various parts of Britain, including Manchester, Halifax, Rochdale and Walsall. The headlines appeared, in all but one case, only in local newspapers. They show the seriousness of race trouble in the various areas, but in the national news media this has received barely a mention.

IN THE FIRST HALF OF THE 1980s, the towns and cities of Britain were convulsed by race riots — demonstrating a truth which we have constantly maintained in this paper: that the multi-racial society cannot work. These disorders, of which possibly the worst was the mayhem which occurred on the Broadwater Farm Estate in Tottenham in 1985, brought fresh calls from many British people for multi-racialism to be ended by a firm ban on further non-white immigration and by a policy for repatriation of those non-Whites already in this country. The calls, needless to say, were not heeded by our political leaders: immigration continued and no repatriation programme was adopted.

During the second half of the 1980s, and through into the 1990s, much less news of racial trouble in Britain has appeared in the mass media, and this has led many people to imagine that race war in our country is now on the wane. In fact the reverse is true; racial conflict in our towns and cities is as great as ever, if not greater. The difference is that there has been a deliberate and conscious conspiracy by the establishment press and broadcasting services to 'hush' up, or at the very least play down, reports of racial disturbances. These disturbances have received some publicity in the areas where they have occurred, but they have had little or no coverage nationally. The only way in which they have been brought to the attention of people over the rest of the country has been by their exposure in the patriotic press, with British Nationalist in the lead.

British Nationalist

No. 111 JULY 1991
Editor: John Morse

'DEMOCRACY' = ANTI-WHITE TYRANNY

THE DEMAND by London's notorious negrophile chief of police, Peter Imbert, for Whites to be banned from standing up for their rights (on which we report on the opposite page) casts an interesting light on the nature of Britain's 'democratic' order.

In denouncing the BNP-led Rights for Whites march in Thamesmead recently, Imbert can be assumed to be regurgitating the real views of this country's political masters. The tell-tale sign as to what these are was the complete absence of any words from Imbert against the earlier viciously anti-white march through the same area led by imported 'Black Power' agitator, the 'Reverend' Al Sharpton and a mob of inner-city low life.

Thamesmead, and the quiet and respectable outer London suburbs through which Sharpton led his retinue of ghetto gangsters, anarchist squatters, queers and junkies is overwhelmingly white.

The subsequent march, in support of Rights for Whites, strongly backed by local residents in the area outraged by the previous march, was carried out in the best tradition of democratic freedom of expression.

It was orderly and disciplined and gave voice to substantial local feeling. In no way was this true of the Sharpton demo, which ended up in a near riot in clean and decent Welling, with Sharpton's followers hurling rocks at the BNP Bookshop.

If Imbert had wanted to prevent white outrage being expressed in the Thamesmead district, he had only to get Sharpton's march in the area banned as a serious threat to public order. He failed to use his powers to do so.

It is noticeable that subsequently it was only the Whites whom he criticised and only the Whites he wanted banned.

Sharpton's rabble had used the death of a black youth in Thamesmead as a pretext for marching. They were there to point the finger at the district's white majority, as if the latter were somehow to blame for this.

Can anyone see Imbert giving Whites the go-ahead to march in Brixton or Southall against the killing of a white person by Blacks or Asians?

In any such case the rights of the local majority would be considered sacrosanct.

We also have yet to see Imbert, or anyone else in his position, denounce any Black, Asian, Irish republican or other anti-British demonstration, no matter how violent, in any of these areas as 'malign', 'provocative' or 'putting the community under siege'. Yet he used all of these grotesque epithets against the march of the Whites in Thamesmead.

This shows clearly what 'democracy' is going to mean under Britain's multi-racial new order.

In areas like white-majority Thamesmead, the 'democratic' principle that will be invoked will be that the rights of minorities are sacred.

But in areas where Whites have become practically a minority, like Brixton or Southall, the opposite principle will suddenly take its place. There it will be argued that the will of the majority is sacred.

The only constant will be that, whatever happens, Whites are to be made to lose out. It is time for Britons to rise up en masse against this tyranny.

THE SORDID SAGA of racial disturbances has not seen any let-up since the front-page exposures we published during 1989 and 1990, reporting the details of riots in various parts of Britain that had been played down or completely hushed up by the news media. Quite the contrary, over the past few months racial trouble has flared up in many new places as well as occurring again in old ones. Again, as in the past, the media have done their best to conceal the full horror of these from the British people.

One of the major trouble spots this year has been the Moss Side area of Manchester, where there has been a state of ongoing war between rival black gangs engaged in the drug trade. This war has resulted in a number of murders over the past four or five years, while attacks resulting in lesser injuries have become epidemic.

In the meantime, just a short way north, Rochdale has been experiencing racial trouble of another kind. Here Asians seem to have been the main problem. A massive riot flared up on August Bank Holiday last year, when a gang of about 250 Asian youths stormed the Town Hall. Motorists travelling along one of the town's major roads were confronted by bands of young Asians wielding baseball bats and bricks, and some of them had their windscreens broken in vicious and wholly unprovoked attacks.

Later some Asian youths were arrested having had explosives found in their possession. The charges against them were subsequently dropped by the decision of the Director of Public Prosecutions. This caused widespread anger among local Whites, including some police officers, who, according to the local Express newspaper (7.12.90), were reported as having said that "Government officers decided to halt the trial to prevent more damage to race relations in the town."

'TRAIL OF DESTRUCTION'

Halifax (Yorks.) was the scene of an outbreak of racial violence on the 9th September last year when, according to the local Courier newspaper, "200 stick-wielding youths ran amok, terrorising residents and leaving a trail of destruction." The same paper reported further violence in the town the following week. Neither of these reports made any mention of the race of the trouble-makers. But local white residents, incensed at what had been happening, made clear in letters to the

Government's education boob

THE TORY GOVERNMENT has for years been trying to 'con' the public into thinking that it is grappling with the mess made of British education by left-wing teachers.

Yet last month it was revealed that this same Government objects to a report produced by a study group set up, at a cost of £21 million, to find ways of improving the teaching of English. The reason? It says that the report produced by those taking part in the study is full of 'banality', 'waffle' and left-wing propaganda. One of its recommendations is that ethnic and regional slang should be accepted as correct English.

It transpires that of the 25 members of the study committee 21 belong to a left-wing pressure group bent on destroying the concept of correctness in language and literature. According to one independent expert: "A lot of them believe teaching children standard English and grammar is an oppression of the working class. They aim to reshape English on multi-cultural, anti-racist and anti-sexist lines."

All of which leaves one big question unanswered: how the hell did the Government allow such people to be members of the study group in the first place — let alone permit £21 million of the taxpayers' money to be allocated to financing them?

paper afterwards that Asians had been to blame. Said one letter-writer of the paper's reports: "I also think that the unworkability of the multi-racial society. But in the 1990s, unlike in the 1980s, news of the trouble is being covered up.

British Nationalist is one paper that will not be party to this cover-up. It will continue to report the news to the people as it happens. They may succeed on placing a gag on the daily press and the broadcasting networks, but one thing is certain: They will never gag us!

MAYHEM IN OUR TOWNS AND CITIES CONTINUES, DESPITE THE NEWS GAG

recent failure to acknowledge the fact that the people responsible for these two latest incidents were Asian or of Asian descent was ill-conceived."

Another area suffering from race trouble has been Walsall, in the West Midlands and next door to strife-torn Wolverhampton and Birmingham. In October of last year violence flared on three successive nights there when local black youths engaged in confrontations with the police — this allegedly resulting from resentment at the latter cracking down on the young Blacks for motoring offences. We would never have heard of this were it not for the fact that we were sent a report that appeared in the local paper.

More recently, in Bolton, Lancs., violence has broken out involving rival gangs of young Asians — again on a scale that warranted reports in the national news media. But there have been little or no reports. Not long ago Burnley, also in Lancashire, was the scene of white-versus-Asian trouble on

The truth is that in the 1990s, just as in the first half of the 1980s, Britain is witnessing an escalation of racial unrest, all of which proves again the

Moss Side, Manchester, where race violence is a commonplace occurrence. Here the trouble is largely between rival gangs of Blacks engaged in the growing drug trade war.

PREPARING FOR MAYHEM

IS THIS (picture below) to be the new-look British Bobby?

Specialist firearms officers like the one shown here, armed to the teeth with automatic weapons, are to be put on the streets of London round the clock.

Their role, as spelt out by Scotland Yard, will be to combat terrorism, and they are to patrol the capital in specially customised vehicles more or less fitted out as mobile armouries.

The specific brief these new squads are to be given looks at first sight a severely limited one. According to Chief Superintendent Frank Haughian in charge of the Belgravia district, "It was felt we needed to introduce the armed patrols because of the increasing number of incidents arising from terrorist attacks on public buildings and public figures."

POLICEMAN OF THE FUTURE?
This is what we can expect on our streets if civil unrest continues to escalate in Britain.

To have terrorism affecting only top people might seem bad enough. Certainly, there is enough of it about, and it shows no sign of diminishing. But this is only the tip of the iceberg where rampant violence now taking hold of Britain is concerned.

Humbler folk, too, are coming more and more under various forms of violent attack, and more and more are finding themselves in need of the protection of armed police.

Just recently, paramilitary-style armed officers, with flak-jackets and weapons, had to be called onto the streets of Torquay, Devon, to hunt a gang of gun-toting robbers following a bank raid.

GHETTO AREAS

But this is not the main cause for alarm. Not surprisingly, in step with all this, the state of our inner cities, after years of Scarman-style softly-softly policing, is drifting from bad to worse. In Manchester's notorious inner-city ghetto areas of Moss Side and Cheetham Hill, US-style street warfare between rival drug gangs, worthy of New York and Washington DC, has erupted. Gun murders have become a way of life, and police find themselves stuck in the middle of a battleground.

One young policeman has said: "We fear one of us may be the next target." This nagging fear has created a demand among officers on the ground for proper protection. Some have even been buying body armour at their own expense, which they see as a sensible protection, because of their superiors' refusal to issue flak jackets except "as situations arise."

Senior officers try to play matters down. According to Manchester's Assistant Chief Constable, Jim Paterson, "This isn't Ulster. In Manchester officers are not direct targets."

But the truth is that Moss Side saw vicious riots in the 1980s, with police right on the receiving end of the mob-violence and hatred, and the same is now happening in the 1990s.

Already, ordinary PCs on the beat insist that there are places in Moss Side they will not enter without back-up. The experience of one veteran constable contradicted the bland claims of his superiors. "There seem to be so many guns here it's becoming like the streets of Belfast," he said.

Up and down Britain there are many more ghetto districts not far different from those of Manchester.

Meanwhile, behind the silence of the politicians of all the established parties on the state of law and order over which they preside in Britain, and behind the public soft-soap of some of the top cops, the authorities seem to have a shrewd idea of what is really on the way. Just recently a number of fortress-like police stations have been built in some of London's inner suburbs.

One of these is in Forest Gate, North London. This is admitted to have been designed with growing civil unrest in mind.

Indeed, it is probable that the main consideration behind the introduction of the new armed police patrols is the probability of these having to be used in quelling disturbances in the ghettos — in other words, racial disturbances — rather than terrorism of the kind coming from the IRA or from Arab groups. However, to admit this publicly is no doubt thought to be damaging to good 'race relations'. Hence the talk of combatting 'terrorism'.

All these measures, from heavily armed police to citadel-like police stations, are, at the end of the day, just counsels of despair, not solutions. They are just symptoms of how Britain is running out of control under its present rulers, who are bankrupt when it comes to cures for the problems their own weakness has brought about.

Britain needs radical measures to restore order. The firm hand of a new leadership is required to put down the anarchy and violence afflicting our country. The way things are going, no matter how many armed bobbies there are on the streets, this country is headed for increasing mayhem and eventual civil collapse.

Behind the collapse of British education — the unspoken factor

MULTI-RACIAL BEDLAM GRIPS NATION'S SCHOOLS

BRITAIN'S educational system has been described as one of the worst in the advanced world. Plenty has been said about public spending cuts, poor teachers, lack of proper facilities and other such material shortcomings as causes of this. No doubt they are big factors in the problem.

But much less has been said about the effects of the multi-racial and multi-cultural environment, forced upon our schools and their pupils by the powers that be in modern Britain.

The tip of what may be a much bigger iceberg than has hitherto been officially admitted was revealed recently when a race riot broke out in the playground of a troubled school in East London.

Police, including mounted riot officers, had to be called when pupils (mainly Bangladeshis) at Stepney Green School, Tower Hamlets, refused to return to class after break-time. The flashpoint came when Somali immigrant teacher Dida Halake, at the time suspended on full pay by Stepney Green's British headmaster, Mr. Don Bennett, on charges of having tried to incite an earlier riot, arrived at the school gates and was duly turned away.

Teachers who had tried to restore order had been set upon. When police came on the scene they were attacked by mobs of screaming young hooligans, some of them no more than 11 years old, who pelted them with missiles.

The juvenile rioters knocked down fences and clambered over locked gates as police battled for over half an hour to master the situation. One policeman remarked: "I have never seen anything like it before. The children were completely out of control."

SCHOOL AT CENTRE OF RACE ROW

The school has been at the centre of an ongoing race row. Towards the end of last year Bangladeshi parent governors on Stepney Green School Board came out with a demand that Mr. Bennett should be sacked and replaced by an Islamic head teacher. Tower Hamlets Education Department rejected this arrogant immigrant bid to seize control of one of the borough's most modern schools.

Mr. Bennett's staff then held a vote of confidence in him which he won by 59 votes to 2. His opponents were Halake and a probationary teacher who was soon afterwards dismissed.

Halake maintained that this sacking was solely due to his colleague's having voted against Mr.

Bennett. This belief seemed to have gained ground among pupils at the school, most of them Halake's fellow Moslems, and to have stoked up the tensions that led to his suspension.

After last month's playground riot Halake denied that he had come to start any such riot. He claimed he was only there to say goodbye to the children. But, whether or not the rampage was in any way planned, pupils seemed very quickly to have got hold of placards demanding the ousting of Mr. Bennett.

Stepney Green School, where no more than 13 per-cent of pupils speak proper English, has serious problems. An official education inspectors' report found that, among other things, teachers were constantly met with 'sexist abuse'. Some teachers didn't know their own pupils and didn't keep track of them or their work, whilst attendance by both staff and pupils was erratic.

OTHER SCHOOLS WORSE!

The inspectors then went on to say that Mr. Bennett could not personally be blamed for this. Significantly, they added that his school's problems were less serious than those of other schools in London!

But of course these inspectors failed to spell out the commonsense conclusion to be drawn from all this — namely that polyglot, multi-cultural, multi-racial education has not a hope in hell of working. There can be no meeting of minds between pupils and teachers of one race and those of another, and no working together in a common school system. Both the abysmal standards prevailing at Stepney Green School (and far beyond, if the inspectors' report is to be believed) and the racial clash that has grown up there are just symptoms of this.

There are only two remedies. In the short term, our schools should be segregated. In the long term, the only solution is the repatriation of all Afro-Asian immigrants and their descendants to their lands of origin. This is the only hope if we are to have an end to the multi-racial bedlam both in our schools and throughout society at large.

Mounted police tackle violent playground protest

THIS was the grim face of education in a Tower Hamlets school last week after a teacher was suspended.

A father's playground turned into a riot zone at 1000 Stepney Green School — children protested at the temporary sacking of a probationary teacher. The teaching tribunal erupted at break-time when suspended teacher Dida Halake was locked out of the school as he came to say goodbye to the children. Violent skirmishes.

Beethoven was black — latest!

ACCORDING to a new magazine calling itself Pride, which is published for Afro-Caribbeans, the composer Beethoven was black. The magazine's editor, Peter Murray, reckons there's been a white "racist conspiracy" to hide this.

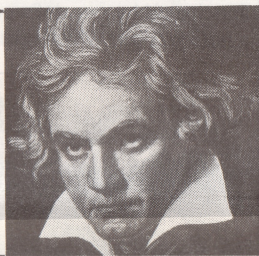

Echoing his editor's paranoia, the article's author, one Shabaz Lamumba, claims that the great composer's identity was carefully "shrouded in mystery" in order to support a general consensus among Europeans that, as he puts it, "black people were not human but a sub-species."

Neither of these gentlemen satisfactorily explains why the part-Flemish, part-German composer, whose antecedents are in fact quite well-known, always appears as a white man in every portrait or bust ever taken of him from youth to old age.

Perhaps all the artists responsible were in on the plot, described by Mr. Murray as part of a "deliberate attempt to deprive the black community of role models."

Seriously though, if Beethoven was in fact black, how come that his music should have so little following among

BEETHOVEN
Was the painter of this portrait a 'racist' conspirator?

Blacks?

Certainly, inner-city residents who have ever been kept awake from dusk to dawn by all-night parties will testify that it hasn't exactly been the majestic strains of the Fifth Symphony that have caused their insomnia!

Messrs. Lamumba and Murray, meanwhile, say they intend to cook up yet more 'evidence' of our geniuses being black. Apparently Beethoven was only the hors d'oeuvre. We can expect similar claims, perhaps, to be made for Shakespeare, Leonardo, Newton, Edison and Logie Baird.

So watch this space!

FAILED COP PLAYING POLITICS

METROPOLITAN POLICE Commissioner Sir Peter Imbert has been a spectacular failure during the time he has occupied his post — crime in the London area is at an all-time record level, and shows no signs of abating. But this does not seem to worry Sir Peter overmuch, for he has other pre-occupations.

Just recently, he has made a public call for 'racist' marches to be banned. Imbert, who probably got his job and his knighthood because half his family have married Blacks and he is on record as being a staunch champion of the multi-racial society, doesn't like the idea of patriotic Britons marching and demonstrating to call attention to the danger of race-mixing and mass immigration, now running at 120,000 a year.

Imbert has said that 'racist' groups 'laying siege' to black and Asian families in Thamesmead had been 'nauseating'. But there are certain things that Imbert the Ignorant should know. One is that Thamesmead is an almost exclusively white district, so the BNP, when it held its march there, wasn't 'laying siege' to anyone. Another is that what most Londoners find truly 'nauseating' is the sight of a failed cop like Imbert playing politics while people in the capital are afraid to go out onto the streets at night.

Sir Peter Imbert would do all Londoners a favour if he were to step down and make way for a real policeman who would bring law and order to the Metropolis, instead of wasting time with public statements attacking native Londoners whose sole 'crime' is to demonstrate peacefully for the rights of their own people.

BRITISH GIRL STUDENT Cathy Ayling was recently abducted from her college in Cheshire and savagely murdered. Her corpse was discovered in the boot of a car at faraway Gatwick Airport.

A suspect has been arrested in the United States. He is Negro Curtis Howard, who is known to have come to Britain in search of Miss Ayling.

It seems that Cathy met Howard, a one-time denizen of Boston's ghetto, whilst studying at a Massachusetts college, where he was on a scholarship funded by the Pepsi Cola company as part of a racial quota scheme.

The girl foolishly allowed him to date her just once. According to her brother, commenting later, "she was just being friendly." From this it would seem that, although not really attracted to Howard, the young lady was reluctant to refuse to go out with him for fear of seeming to be 'racist'.

But for Howard this one date was enough. Given an inch, he took a mile. He interpreted her superficial friendliness as 'love', and thenceforth wouldn't leave her alone. This continued even when she returned home to this country.

Latterly, she was living in terror of him, and even went into hiding at one point. This was not without reason.

Howard came over to Britain, broke into Cathy's sister's home, evidently looking for her, and carved crazed death-threats against her on a wall. He also desecrated her father's grave.

THE DEAD GIRL
Cathy Ayling (seen here) was a victim of her times

After this he was caught by the police, but instead of being sent to jail he was merely shipped back to the States on the orders of feeble local magistrates. Let off the hook scot-free once, Howard made his way back to Britain, it is thought on a false passport.

It was very soon afterwards that Miss Ayling, who seems to have been stalked around her college, was abducted and killed.

She herself was described as a high-flying student with a brilliant future.

But there was obviously something missing from her education. That she evidently gave Howard the time of day to the extent that she did seems to show that in his case at least she just couldn't say no.

Perhaps she was another victim of the common disease of white females in the face of minorities. Loaded by their 'liberal' upbringing, with guilt-ridden pro-minority hang-ups, too many of them are defenceless in the face of minority members. Desperately anxious not to be seeming to adopt 'racist' attitudes, they allow themselves to be dated by suitors whom they would not normally have anything to do with. This, it would seem, was what poor Cathy Ayling did.

In our August issue of the same year we published another front-page exposure — this time of a major racial disorder in Bradford, this time in which mostly young Asians were involved. Again, there had been scarcely any mention of this in the national news media; we had received our information about it entirely from local sources.

British Nationalist was again in the forefront of the campaign to expose racial trouble hushed up by the national news media when in March 1990 we gave front-page treatment to a major riot in the notorious Toxteth district of Liverpool, which had occurred the previous month. This involved a mob of 500, overwhelmingly black, that had gone on a rampage against the police, hurling bricks and setting fire to cars. The Daily Telegraph and Sunday Telegraph gave some mention of this outbreak during the following days, but the rest of the papers almost totally ignored it.

Then in our issue for July 1990, again on the front page, we gave prominence to a further case of race trouble in Bradford, once more involving Asians, who in their hundreds went on the rampage in the Manningham district in 'protest' against Salman Rushdie and his book, stoning buses, cars and local shops as well as attacking police. In the same issue we drew attention to another piece of mayhem involving Asians, in this case in Birmingham, where fighting broke out between rival Asian gangs at an Asian festival. Police in riot gear were pelted with stones as they tried to restore order. Both these incidents had occurred on Saturday, May 26th — and yet there was little about them in the main Sunday papers the following day, which concentrated attention on a football riot in Bournemouth involving Leeds United fans. No doubt this choice of priorities was, as we suggested at the time, determined by the fact that the football trouble-makers were white!

In the months since we reported these cases racial trouble has not abated, as we have indicated on page two.

THE GREAT EURO-DEBATE: WE SAY...

NO to monetary union NO to federalism NO to the EC

DURING the past month we have seen a furious row developing in the Tory Party over Europe. On the one side there have been the fanatical Euro-integrators, led by ex-Premier Edward Heath, on the other side the self-proclaimed advocates of British national sovereignty, led by another ex-Premier Margaret Thatcher. In the meantime, present Premier John Major and the members of his Government have tried to adopt a 'middle-of-the-road' posture, appearing to be all things to everybody. Major & Co. are of course concerned primarily with one thing: they want to maintain a semblance of party unity so as to give them some chance of winning the next election. To them, the future and destiny of Britain are of less importance than the considerations of party politics.

The whole spectacle is an unedifying one.

Take Mr. Heath. His record over the European issue has, from the very beginning, been one of dishonesty. Right now he is pouring scorn on those who argue that Britain must maintain her national sovereignty. Yet shortly before he took us into the European Community as Prime Minister in 1973 he was protesting that we would not sacrifice what he called "any essential sovereignty" by joining.

But Mrs. Thatcher's record is no better. In recent weeks she has been fulminating against the idea of a single European currency and of European monetary union. Yet it was she who, as Prime Minister, bulldozed the bill through the House of Commons committing Britain to support of the Single European Act, which clearly involved our agreement to support a single currency and eventual monetary union.

MAJOR
He puts party politics before Britain's future.

And the effort of Major and his Cabinet to steer a middle course between the Heath and Thatcher factions is equally fatuous. It also involves a great deal of dishonesty, for Mr. Major knows very well, as Mrs. Thatcher does, where all the roads to Europe have been leading. They have been leading inexorably towards full monetary union and towards European federalism, a European super-state. To pretend that there is some future for Britain in the European Community without these commitments is to tell a lie.

WHAT IS FEDERALISM?

In the last few weeks there has been argument about the meaning of 'federalism'. Some have claimed that federalism means a political union under a single government, others that it means only a voluntary association in which the member-states retain full sovereignty. As far as we are concerned, there can be no argument on this point.

Chambers Twentieth Century Dictionary defines the word federal as follows:-

"...of a union or government in which several states, while independent in home affairs, combine for national or general purposes, as in the United States (in the American Civil War Federal was the name applied to the states of the North, which defended the Union against the Confederate separatists of the South)."

The meaning could not be more clear. Under the constitution of the United States, the constituent states of the Union are independent in local affairs, but they surrender to the Federal Government powers over vital national affairs, such as defence, foreign policy and overall economic management, the latter including the power to issue money. As the definition in the dictionary indicates, where there is merely a collection of states who collaborate together but retain full sovereignty over all affairs that is called a confederation — something entirely different.

Our politicians who try to dismiss references to 'federation' by saying that it means different things to different people are not being honest. 'Federation' means quite clearly that there is a surrender of sovereignty, nothing else, nothing less.

OUR VIEW

So how do British Nationalist and the British National Party see this issue? There can be no doubt about the way we see it.

We maintain that Britain must resist all moves towards a single currency, all moves towards monetary union and all moves towards federation. But she must do more than that.

She must withdraw from the European Community altogether.

Britain must withdraw from the European Community because there simply is no way to remain a member while not being committed, sooner or later, to full union — political and economic.

So what about the alternative that Mrs. Thatcher is now talking about: an Atlantic free trade area, embracing Britain and Europe together with North America (including, she says, Mexico)?

This is nonsense and for very clear reasons.

Free trade has proved to be the ruin of British industry. Everything that has happened over the past 12 years of Tory Government is evidence of it. Mrs. Thatcher, by talking of an extended free trade area, is simply showing that she has learned absolutely nothing from her own monumental failures in the running of the British economy.

What British industry needs right now is protection — the protection that has made Japanese industry the most successful and powerful in the world.

MRS. THATCHER
She now says she opposes a single European currency, but her passing of the Single European Act led right to it.

By means of protection, full employment can be achieved in this country. By means of protection, demolished British manufacturing industries can be restored and built up again. By means of protection, those industries can have an assured market for which to produce — thus equipping them much better to compete in overseas markets.

And if we are talking about Britain joining a larger economic area which extends beyond the British Isles, what is wrong with an area embracing the countries of the Old Commonwealth: Australia, New Zealand and Canada. Here we would have partners whose economies are far less competitive to ours and far more complementary. They produce what we need and we produce what they need.

Such an area would provide a market of nearly 100 million, totally self-sufficient in food and almost totally self-sufficient in minerals and energy products.

That is what we advocate as the alternative to Europe.

But none of this means that we should not maintain good relations with our European neighbours, or that we should not co-operate with them in areas where genuine mutual interests justify it.

It simply means that any co-operation we enter into with Europe will be co-operation engaged in voluntarily — without loss of sovereignty and without the sacrifice of any vital interest.

This is the nationalist way. It is the best way. And, as developments in many parts of the world (including some parts of Europe) indicate, it is the way of the future.

YUGOSLAVIA TODAY, EUROPE TOMORROW?

THE BORDER GUARD on the left, standing with rifle at the ready, symbolises the conflict that is now raging in Yugoslavia, where the brittle federation, put together out of Serbia and some remnants of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire after World War I, is now in danger of imminent disintegration, with the republics of Slovenia and Croatia trying to secede.

Is this a foretaste of what Europe as a whole can look forward to if its nations are dragged into political union? Will Yugoslavia's agony today be Europe's agony tomorrow?

No army cuts!

INTERNATIONAL SITUATION DOES NOT JUSTIFY REDUCTIONS IN BRITAIN'S FORCES

THE MINISTRY OF DEFENCE has recently announced a decision to reduce the strength of the British Army by more than 25 per-cent. Considerable cuts are also planned for other branches of the armed forces.

These reductions are going to result, inevitably, in the break-up of some of the Army's most famous regiments. Indeed, so great are the intended cuts that many army chiefs believe that the whole regimental system, which has provided one of the major props of the British Army across the centuries, is now in danger.

The pretext for all this is that, with the changes in Eastern Europe, the world situation is now very different from what it was previously. According to our rulers, Britain no longer faces the threats to her interests and security that she did previously.

We believe that this reasoning is false. It is dangerous. At worst, it is treasonable and criminal.

To begin with, the world situation has not changed in any fundamental way as a result of the break-up of the Soviet Empire. It remains a dangerous world to live in, a world in which nations must at all times be prepared to face threats to their security and vital interests, a world in which only the strong are likely to survive.

As just one example, the Falklands War was one in which Britain faced a threat to her interests that did not come from the Soviet Union or any of its former satellites; it was not an 'East-west' war of the kind anticipated by our defence-planners; it was a national war which required Britain to act would not have had the resources to rescue the Falkland Islands from the Argentine invaders.

A funny sense of priorities

IN THE Daily Telegraph on June 19th a report appeared which was headed 'Extra infantry battalion to go as Gurkhas survive'.

According to the report: "Threatened British infantry regiments believe their future hangs in the balance because of a decision to preserve two of the five Gurkha battalions."

One of the consequences of this will probably be that one of the most distinguished Welsh regiments, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, will be disbanded, thus leaving only one Welsh infantry regiment.

One Welsh regiment and two Gurkha regiments!

This paper does not wish to disparage the Gurkhas. They have proved fine soldiers and have over the years served Britain with distinction.

But when it comes to choosing between a Gurkha regiment and a British regiment, the choice should always go to the British regiment.

That the Government should be planning big cuts in the Army is bad enough. But even worse is the news that, in its own scale of priorities, Nepalese come before Welshmen!

THE FALKLANDS
Royal Marine leads Argentine prisoners into captivity. Britain could not fight another war like this with the forces cuts now being planned.

on its own. We managed to win it — but only just. Had our forces been reduced in the way that has occurred subsequently, and is now being further planned, we simply

There is no reason whatsoever for us to assume that a Falklands-type conflict will not face us again.

This is why this paper believes that there is no justification for the military cuts now being planned by the Government. Our armed forces, far from being reduced, should in fact be expanded. They need to be stronger, not weaker.

And the old regimental system must at all costs be preserved. None of the existing British regiments should be disbanded. Indeed, there is a strong argument for the re-establishment of some of the famous regiments that have disbanded in the past.

A nation that is not prepared to pay the price required for the maintenance of powerful armed forces at all times is a nation that has forfeited the right to exist. History is replete with examples of this.

It is time that our rulers learned something from history.

Challenger picked — but tank choice should never have been in doubt

AFTER years of 'window-shopping' around the world, the Government has finally decided to buy the British-made Challenger 2 tank as replacement to the aging Chieftain. There were great celebrations at the Vickers factories in Leeds and Newcastle, where the tank is made, as a good many jobs stood to be lost had the tank been bought overseas, as originally feared.

In fact, the Government should never have been in any doubt in the first place about buying a British tank. It was argued that the forces must have the best of all weapons and equipment, regardless of whether it is British or not. However, this overlooks the fact that the first need of national defence is to maintain a thriving arms industry. Service chiefs were not unanimous about the Challenger being the best, but it was still right to order it.

For once, this Government has done the correct thing — though it prevaricated for long enough!

A FACTORY SAVED — FOR THE TIME BEING
Workers at Vickers factory in Leeds celebrate Government decision to choose Challenger as principal British battle tank.

NEWS FROM ROUNDAABOUT

Wars of Roses refought by BNP

IT WAS the Red Rose versus the White all over again when Rochdale BNP met Yorkshire BNP for a football friendly challenge on Sunday, June 16th, in Wakefield, Yorks. Despite the downpour, both sides fielded strong teams. The game saw each side piled up the goals. Victory, however, went with a narrow margin to Yorkshire BNP after their 8th goal was disallowed by the Lancs. referee(!), who blew for time as it sailed into the net.

Devon BNP make waves

DEVON BNP have been making waves recently with a massive surge in activity. Over the past two months many thousands of leaflets and stickers have gone out, and this has been reinforced with paper sales in Bideford, Barnstaple, Exeter and Okehampton and at Plymouth Argyle football ground.

The numbers of enquiries received by national HQ are proof enough of the good work being done by Devon BNP, and the formation of new party units in the South West is just a matter of time.

Bradford BNP upsets the reds

BRADFORD, for years a breeding pit for the red filth that infest West Yorkshire, has recently enjoyed a spell of refreshing activity from the British National Party. The local unit, under the able leadership of Bruce Barron, has grown from just two activists less than a year ago to double-figures today. And as Bradford BNP has got bigger so the scope of activities has grown with it.

Wednesday, June 5th, was the day when the BNP in Bradford flexed its muscles. The management of the 'Olde Peculiar' public house in the area decided to bar the lefty trash who had been using it for their drugs and depravity. The reds immediately mounted a demo claiming 'racism'.

On the night of June 5th the reds were having a meeting to decide their next move. To their dismay, 15 BNP members turned up to put an opposite point of view. Scared out of their wits, the reds barricaded themselves into their meeting hall and cringed there behind locked doors. Prevented from entering the hall, the BNP mounted a peaceful counter-demo outside. Following this, a busy leaflet and sticker drive was mounted to finish off the evening. Bruce Barron would like to thank all those who took part in this highly successful event.

BNP back in York

ON SATURDAY, June 22nd, the Yorkshire regional activist corps headed by Regional Organiser Eddy Morrison joined with local York members to carry out a day of action in the city. A week before, a tip-off was received from the press that the local red mob, based on the university campus, were planning to 'stop the BNP' on the day. Also the local police were mobilised to stop the nationalists at York Station at 11.00 a.m., which was the scheduled kick-off point.

Rapid reorganisation meant that the regional activist corps, 26-strong, met outside York in the nearby town of Tadcaster, and from there, accompanied by comrades over from Lancashire, took to the streets of York for a mass leaflet drive and paper sale. The Union Jack was flying once again near the historic Jorvik centre - site of the old Viking capital of York - when some 70-plus 'anti-fascist' morons arrived.

Immediately, the 'anti-fascists' let forth their usual din, including insults to the flag. One individual actually attempted to spit on the Union Jack - upon which a young BNP activist immediately dealt with him, resulting in the lefty warrior beating a retreat on all fours along the pavement!

The police then arrived and saved the reds from further rough handling by the BNP, and at that point the Regional Organiser was served with a notice that the paper sale was being construed as an 'illegal meeting' and that the BNP team would have to disperse and leave the city.

Morale, however, was high as the activist corps made its way back to Tadcaster for an afternoon drink. A long interview with the York Evening Press was also given in Tadcaster and much local publicity ensued.

SPLASH IN SCOTLAND

Harry Mullin profiled in the Sunday Mail

ONCE AGAIN, Fidelma Cook of Scotland's favourite rag, the Sunday Mail, has given the British National Party another full-colour publicity burst, with a big middle-page spread in the paper.

In an exclusive interview with Harry Mullin, she scored a propaganda 'own goal': "Now, 56-year-old Harry is proud to stand up and be counted as the British National Party's candidate in the General Election. His huge fists clench as he emphasises his points:-

'We need leadership in this country... We don't want people who are wimps sitting in parliament content to enjoy fat salaries at the expense of us white British unemployed. We need an Oliver Cromwell to say: 'Get out of here - go!'

"The frightening aspect of Harry Mullin is his eloquence. His anger and passion inspire a power which one could imagine stirs the skinhead no-hope bully boys who make up the bulk of BNP support."

Quite apart from phony Fidelma's lie about the bulk of BNP support, Harry comes over well and gets even better. Talking about some BNP supporters, he says:-

'... They wear denim like me because it's all they can afford. I can't afford £200 suits, like the middle class. Here am I, on the dole, in poverty, in a tiny flat, and middle class lefties jeer at us.

'I served my country. My father and his father did. My family have died for it, and those who came back to a land fit for heroes came back to a stinking slum. I want a job. I'd do anything. And that's why I want to be a MP.'

Harry's sincerity and honesty came over overwhelmingly in the article - despite the attempt of the interviewer to portray him as unfavourably as possible. He showed himself prepared to speak from the heart about the issues that confront the British people, and with eloquence, fire and passion. The social aspect of poverty and unemployment is one that the BNP addresses with nationalist economics and the slogan 'Ban foreign imports!'

The British National Party is indeed lucky to have such a sterling candidate in Harry Mullin.

Nottingham BNP announce election candidate

THE NOTTINGHAM BRANCH of the British National Party, committed to fighting the next general election, has chosen to contest the Erewash constituency in neighbouring Derbyshire.

The prospective parliamentary candidate is Laurence Johnson (27), who fought the Cotgrove seat in Notts. in the recent local government elections and gained 6.7 per-cent of the vote.

Mr. Johnson said: "We realise that this election will be much harder to fight than the local government election. For one thing, we need to leaflet over ten times the number of homes. But our supporters last time worked very hard, and I'm sure they will put the same effort into this campaign. We are determined to get at least 5 per-cent of the vote and retain our deposit."

The Nottingham BNP is convinced that its success in the local elections was due to its strategy of multiple-leafleting, in which each household received at least four different leaflets, some on local issues. Over 12,000 leaflets were delivered in that campaign.

The lies of the Sunday Express

THE BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY was the subject of a full-page article which appeared in the Sunday Express on June 30th and was written by Brian Duffy.

Duffy claimed he gained entry into the party's Welling bookshop by pretending to be sympathetic to the BNP and actually signing up as a member. In the event, his article was a tissue of lies from start to finish.

These began with the allegation that Richard Edmonds when speaking at a meeting in Mitcham had called Blacks 'niggers' and had described them as 'animal scum'. Richard Edmonds used no words remotely like these, as can be attested by about 30 people who were present at the meeting - to have spoken like that would have been to invite certain prosecution under the race act.

Duffy went on to speak of the BNP's 'secret headquarters' at Welling. In fact the building is neither a headquarters nor is it secret; its address is publicised regularly on page six of this paper - see for yourself!

Later on in the article Duffy reported that BNP members driving back to Welling in the party's van after a leaflet 'drive' were singing a song which went 'Belsen was a gas'. People in the vehicle on the occasion have testified that this is wholly untrue - as was also the allegation that the same members were carrying weapons.

In another part Duffy alleged that in his presence members at the bookshop were singing the 'Horst Wessel Song' (the Nazi anthem). Again a lie.

He then reported BN editor John Morse as saying to him: "The typical nigger is stupid scum." Mr. Morse said nothing of the kind.

To sum up, Mr. Duffy's article was gutter journalism at its worst. As for 'secrecy', the only secrecy at work was his own, when he lied about his sympathies in order to gain the confidence of BNP personnel.

Estate vigilante patrols 'set up'

Members of the extremist British National Party said today they had set up vigilante patrols on a Walsall estate.

They said the police presence on the Dudley Fields Estate was inadequate to combat vandalism and violence.

Mr Anthony Blundell, spokesman for the Bloxwich branch, said the action follows reports that a man was beaten up in an unprovoked attack earlier this week.

Top party officials plan to draft in members from all over the West Midlands to patrol the estate.

But the action was condemned today by a senior police officer who said people should not take the law into their own hands.

Superintendent Brian Higginbotham, of Willenhall police, said that police presence on the estate was adequate.

He refuted the party's claims that the police were not doing enough to stamp out crime on the estate.

"The estate is no worse than any other area in Walsall. We have had no reports of the incident which allegedly took place on Thursday evening.

"I cannot condone any moves to set up vigilante groups."

But Mr Blundell said the 15 vigilantes would patrol the area every night until they felt their presence was no longer needed.

"The police have done nothing and will probably blame us now if there is any more trouble," he said.

He said gangs of up to 30 youths, of all races and backgrounds, had been terrorising residents.

The report above appeared in the Express & Star newspaper on June 1st.

BNP vigilantes out in Milton Keynes and Walsall

FOLLOWING the example set by Redbridge Branch a short time ago, the Milton Keynes Branch of the BNP and the newly formed Walsall and Bloxwich groups have set up special patrols in their respective areas to protect local people against violent criminals and sex-attackers.

This has been done not to replace proper policing but only in recognition of the fact that mounting crime in Britain's towns and cities is now getting completely out of hand and beyond the capacity of police forces to control using conventional methods.

In both cases these BNP patrols have excited great local interest and attracted considerable local press publicity. The patrols have of course come under attack from local left-wing groups, as might be expected, but they have also been largely welcomed by local citizens, as some comments made to newspaper reporters in Milton Keynes made clear.

As was the case following the Redbridge patrols, it is reported that attacks on defenceless people in Milton Keynes have decreased since the patrols were introduced.

Vigilantes patrol the street with rottweilers

WE WILL STAMP OUT THE PERVERTS

FAR RIGHT vigilante patrols with rottweilers have taken to the streets of Milton Keynes to "combat crime".

Paramilitary-style units have vowed to "clear the streets of perverts" in response to a recent spate of vile sex attacks on city schoolgirls.

The anti-crime patrols say they will question "suspects" and arrest anyone they regard as acting suspiciously. Spokesman Paul Evans said: "We are taking the law into our own hands. If the cops can't protect our kids then we will."

When asked if the units would resort to violence, he replied: "I cannot say how our people will react if faced with a child molester."

Furious police have slammed the scheme. Detective sergeant Dick O'Connell stressed: "We are totally opposed to vigilante or cowboy type patrols."

And he warned: "We would remind those who take part that, should they break the law, they may be subject to both criminal and civil action."

Evans, a member of the British National Party, told the 'Citizen': "We aren't going out to cause trouble, but we hereby warn these people that if they are caught by our patrol they will become the victims."

Asked if vigilantes would hand out beatings, he told us: "That depends."

He added: "Our units will be patrolling Bradville, Bradwell and Healds to start with, but we will go wherever there are problems - we will stamp out the scum."

The Collapse of BRITISH POWER

CORRELLI BARNETT

THE COLLAPSE OF BRITISH POWER (by Correlli Barnett). This book, first published in the early 1970s, is a damning indictment of the mentality of liberalism, tracing its early influence on the mind of Britain's ruling establishment back to the first half of the 19th century. The author's theme is that it is this influence that induced this country's rulers to forget that we live in a highly competitive world, in which nations have to organise themselves for collective survival, and instead to dwell in a dream world, in which there is perpetual peace and goodwill between the nations. Essential for an understanding of the roots of our present decline. 643pp. £9.95 plus £2.50 p&p.

OTHER LOSSES (by James Bacque). In this book the French-Canadian author documents the maltreatment and deaths suffered by German POWs under Eisenhower's occupying US troops after World War II. The book is an eye-opener for those who believe all the allied leaders to have been 'good guys'. 230pp. £13.95 plus £2.00 p&p.

BNP attacks IRA march

"SAS...Bang, bang, bang!" This was one of the chants as BNP members and Scottish loyalists confronted an Irish republican march in Scotland's capital city last month. Referring to the recent SAS ambush in which three IRA murderers were very efficiently and properly eliminated, the chant drowned out republican bands and marchers and clearly upset the varieties of low life present on the parade.

It all happened in Edinburgh on Saturday, June 8th. Previously, the organisers of Glasgow and Edinburgh BNP met to arrange a counter-demonstration against the provocative annual Connolly march — this being promoted by an organisation fronting for the IRA.

On the day, 50 members from Cumnock, Cumbernauld, Paisley, Greenock and Glasgow met up in the latter city to travel the 55 miles to Edinburgh.

The BNP men from Strathclyde were then redirected onto a pub to meet 50 more members and supporters from the East of Scotland just before mid-day.

At around 2.30 p.m. the one-hundred-strong BNP force marched to the pre-planned city centre demo point. Here the BNP people met with around 80 loyalists alongside the route of the march, whereupon 20 republicans were quickly escorted away by the police in the interests of their own safety.

By the time the march column appeared and the air turned sour with the stench of the anti-British garbage, there were just over 200 BNP and loyalist supporters present. As the march drew past, a 'BNP supports loyal Ulster' banner was unveiled, and this, together with Union Jacks and St. Andrew's Cross flags, made an impressive sight.

A concerted effort was then made to rush the march, breaching the protective cordon and closing with the enemy. Fighting broke out as the march was brought to a halt in some confusion, with press and TV cameras recording the events for posterity. After a minute or so, the police intervened to protect the IRA trash and the march was allowed to continue. There were no arrests of BNP members.

BNP chants of 'scum, scum, scum', 'Rule Britannia' and 'SAS...Bang, bang, bang!' had such a high noise level that the republican marchers and bands could hardly be heard, as BNP and loyalists followed them down the hill.

As the Fenians disappeared around a corner they thought they had seen the last of the BNP — but they were wrong! Taking a short cut, the large body of BNP and loyalist supporters beat them to the rally point at the Meadows, to heckle the republicans in view of the TV and press cameras. As the march diverted to avoid the BNP presence, the 'BNP supports loyal Ulster' banner was again held aloft —

Glasgow Four released!

THE GLASGOW FOUR — the four BNP activists jailed last year for their action in defending the party against a vicious attack by a gang of reds in the city — were released from prison at the end of May.

The four men, Ian McMillan, Brian Ross, Craig Chapman and Derek Stevenson, are unbroken in spirit as a result of their time 'inside' and are determined to get back into the struggle.

They have asked British Nationalist to thank all party supporters who wrote to them and sent them gifts when they were in prison. Everything received, they say, was greatly appreciated.

The four men sentenced are not criminals — their only 'offence' was that of defending themselves and their party comrades against an enemy attack. They have their names inscribed on the BNP roll of honour, and British Nationalist takes this opportunity to say to all of them: WELCOME BACK!

SCOTTISH ACTIVISTS ON MOVE

SATURDAY, May 18th saw activists from Glasgow, Greenock and Edinburgh converge on Bellshill, near Motherwell, for the day the Apprentice Boys have their 'big walk'. Setting up near the finishing point with the Union Flag fluttering gently in the breeze, the activists started a mass paper sale and handed out leaflets. In just 15 minutes all 120 papers were sold, including a few back issues; all the 600 leaflets had gone, all the posters had been sold with stickers — the customers had not wasted any time!

The BNP sales team had intended going back to Glasgow immediately to have a paper sale at Hampden Park, where the Scottish Cup Final was being held, but alas they did not have a single paper left to sell. So they retired to a pub and watched the football on TV.

Meanwhile, another sales team took the party message to Arbroath, where

Arbroath: BNP team sets up its sales pitch in town centre and all the stickers had been given out.

The enthusiasm for the BNP was overwhelming, and the activists could hardly believe the amazing response of the folk of Bellshill.

As the Apprentice Boys went for lunch, BNP activists travelled back to the town centre and found it covered a highly successful sale of British Nationalist was held. This was the first activity held in the town, and the response of the locals was extremely encouraging.

During the past month two new units have been formed in Scotland, in Lanarkshire and Cumnock (Ayrshire).

BNP breaks into Rhondda Valley

ON a recent Saturday, members from Cardiff BNP joined Rhondda activists to sell British Nationalist and distribute 'Derelict Britain' leaflets in the centre of Aberdare.

The team later went on to repeat the process in Merthyr Tydfil.

Staged in localities where the BNP was appearing publicly for the first time, both drives caused a considerable stir and met with a most encouraging response. All signs indicate much latent support for the BNP in the Rhondda

Valley — traditionally a Labour stronghold — and similar activities are planned there on a wide scale in the future.

Persistent poster and sticking in Cardiff is also proving very effective, resulting in an increasing flow of enquiries.

It can safely be said that a great amount of patient and determined groundwork in the South Wales region is now beginning to bear fruit — particularly in the Rhondda.

British Nationalist makes its appearance in the Rhondda
